Excerpt from The Ohio Multiple-Unit Poultry House The picture on the cover page shows two and one-half units, and illustrates the ease with which the plans can be adapted to any length desired. The width of the house can, in like manner, be adjusted to meet the requirements of each owner. We advise the 25-foot width for large flocks and the 20-foot width for smaller ones. Under no conditions should the house be built narrower than 20 feet. If the width of the house is reduced, the height in front should also be reduced, leaving the height in the rear the same as the wider house. Using 5 feet as a basis for the rear, the height in front can easily be determined by allowing approximately inches to the foot as slope for the roof. For a 20-foot house, this would make the height in front 9 feet. The standard lengths of dimension lumber for the front framing should be taken into consideration.
