Excerpt from Utilization of Bigleaf Maple of the Pacific Northwest In the open the trees have short trunks and dense, round-topped crowns, while those in dense stands produce timber comparatively clear of branches from one-half to two-thirds of their height. Even then the bole is rarely without bad crooks, forks, burls, or other defects, which reduce to a considerable extent the value of the species for commercial purposes. In poor situations or at the higher elevations bigleaf maple is sometimes scrublike. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
